What is a Waterproof Jacket?

Waterproof jackets (or hard shells as they are also known) are the final protective layer in your layering system.

The main difference between these waterproof layers is the fabric they are made from and the level of breathability that this will give you.

The level of breathability is dependent on your chosen activity:

- High aerobic activities (such as mountain climbing, hill walking etc) necessitate the use of highly breathable fabrics.
- Less arduous activities (such as day to day use, or lowland walking) require a less breathable garment.

What is a 3-in-1 Jacket?

These jackets are part of the layering system. Layers are essential to keep you warm and dry. A 3-in-1 comprises both a midlayer as well as a 'hard shell' or outer layer, which can be zipped together. This is known as 'Interactive' jacket, or marked simply as 'IA'.

Interactive jackets secure into the midlayer via zips or hook points, which allow you to take them out or put them in with ease.

The benefits of a 3-In-1 Jacket:

- An outer layer that repels water and wind that can be worn alone in wet weather.
- A mid layer (usually a fleece) that insulates you. This can be worn under the hard-shell.
- Zip out capabilities so the fleece can be worn alone in good weather.

Evolve II Triclimate Jacket

With a waterproof and breathable 2-layer HyVent™ shell and removable soft fleece inner jacket, you've got the option of three jacket combinations.

- + Brushed collar lining, velcro adjustable cuffs with elastic

What is an insulated Jacket?

Insulated jackets are best suited to periods of low exertion when you need maximum insulation, without the need for too much breathability and are suitable for extremely cold temperatures.

They work by trapping in warm air which is radiated by the wearer's body, which then circulates and keeps the heat within the jacket.

Typically features:

- Fleece linings at the cuffs and neck to prevent rising heat from escaping
- Storm sealing/Inbuilt storm flaps for use in severe weather conditions
- Hoods with extra padding to prevent heat loss from the head
- Zipped hand warmer pockets for comfort
- Toggles and elastics at the neck and cuffs to seal in heat.

What is a Fleece?

Fleeces are a midlayer designed to keep heat in and cold temperatures out and are generally used over a baselayer and under a hardshell.

Fleece itself is a generalised name given to a manmade synthetic fibre such as polyester. Fleece can be a varied term, referring to a garment that feels soft to touch like a wool.

Although synthetics are used to create fleeces (usually polyester), some fleeces are made from a blend of natural fibres, such as polyester mixed with wool/cotton/nylon, as well as elastane (or lycra) for stretch and increased flexibility.

Typical features include:

- Easy to care for and usually machine washable
- Dries quickly and does not require ironing
- Naturally insulating
- Inexpensive dependent on the quality of the fibres used

Bodywarmers

What is a bodywarmer or gilet?

A gilet is a sleeveless vest designed to offer warmth and protection to your core, also known as a bodywarmer.

The sleeveless style allows total freedom for movement which is popular for a variety of activities. You can wear a gilet in numerous ways, as a casual day item, for hikes on autumn days over a long t-shirt or shirt, or combined with a fleece and/or jacket.

Zips or poppers are common features with gilets, so they are easily adjustable for venting qualities. Flat lock, or seam stitched designs means the bulk has been compressed so you have a packable shape.

For the maximum warmth, look for a gilet with a layer of insulation, either in the form of down or a manmade synthetic. Other options can include a gilet made from wind-blocking material, to protect you from cold without overheating.

100 Aurora Vest

This new fleece incorporates a Polartec® Micro Velour fabric with stretchy panels at the sides for valuable flexibility in the arms, and elasticated bindings at the armholes for a secure fit.

Guide to Bags and Luggage

Travel bags need to be functional and durable to cope with being taken on long adventures. Sizes and styles of travel bags vary, dependent on where you are travelling to. Cargo bags are typically held via side handles, whereas travel rucksacks fit on the back and are secured to fit.

Cargo Bags/Duffel Bags

Ideal for medium to heavy amounts of luggage and general trips such as weekend travel.

Rucksacks/Backpacking Bags

Ideal for frequent travel, for example use in hostels, these hold large amounts of weight and vary in litre sizes, from 35 to 70 plus!

Wheeled luggage/Trolley bags

These are ideal for short periods of travel when you need plenty of storage. These are mostly designed to be pulled along, so require flat surfaces and don't work well, or can be damaged on rough terrain.
